More broadly, where does the boundary between Carpenter and the third-party doctrine lie after today? Carpenter gave "courts and law enforcement officers no indication how to determine whether any particular category of information falls" on the Carpenter or Miller side of the line, and today's decision does no better. Carpenter, 585 U. S., at 340 (Kennedy, J., dissenting). Do the police need a warrant to obtain a person's Amazon purchase history? What about a person's Google search history or Venmo transaction log? Those kinds of information fall squarely within the third-party doctrine, and today's holding about "cell phone location information" does not ostensibly disturb that fact. Ante, at 638 (internal quotation marks omitted). At the same time, those data can paint a similarly detailed picture of a person's private life, and law enforcement had no easy way to obtain this information in "an earlier age."[8] Ante, at 626. If the Court maintains its unwillingness to engage with such "line-drawing questions," ante, at 630, n. 9, Carpenter's warrant requirement might soon come for all forms of digital surveillance.

Page Proof Pending Publication

* * *

In Carpenter, I worried that we might be "picking up the pieces" of our Fourth Amendment doctrine for a long time to come. 585 U. S., at 362 (dissenting opinion). Today's decision all but guarantees that we will be cleaning up debris for the foreseeable future.

JUSTICE BARRETT, dissenting.

I have no quarrel with Carpenter v. United States, 585 U. S. 296 (2018), or with the Court's decision to grant certio-

[8] Moreover, it is common these days for a single company, such as Google, to offer cellular plans, provide location services, maintain payment systems, host shopping platforms, and more. Companies have incentives to aggregate a user's data across these services, and this tendency will further complicate any efforts to draw Fourth Amendment lines among different sorts of third-party records.

rari in this case. But I agree with JUSTICE ALITO that under our Fourth Amendment precedent, including Carpenter, Chatrie had no reasonable expectation of privacy in data about his public movements that he voluntarily disclosed to Google. I therefore respectfully dissent.

Page Proof Pending Publication

Reporter's Note

The attached opinion has been revised to reflect the usual publication and citation style of the United States Reports. The revised pagination makes available the official United States Reports citation in advance of publication. The syllabus has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader and constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court. A list of counsel who argued or filed briefs in this case, and who were members of the bar of this Court at the time this case was argued, has been inserted following the syllabus. Other revisions may include adjustments to formatting, captions, citation form, and any errant punctuation. The following additional edits were made:

Page Proof Pending Publication

p. 617, n. 4, line 12: "the" is changed to "a"
p. 646, last line: "Carpenter, 585" is changed to "584"
p. 646, last line: "(majority opinion)" is deleted
p. 653, line 4 from bottom: "Winn" is changed to "Wynn"